Agway Metals Case Study | 570 STRADBROOK CONDOMINIUM

While searching for a high-quality non-traditional cladding to finish off their creative vision of a new Winnipeg condominium development, at 570 Stradbrook Avenue, the design architect chose AGWAY Flat Lock panels. In addition to avoiding the run-of-the-mill appearance of bricks and mortar, the stunning aesthetics offered by Flat Lock delivered a look that has truly set this development apart from the adjacent buildings within the neighbourhood.

The goal was to deliver an exterior façade that would provide a unique exterior aesthetic without being overbearing or intrusive. Something different yet because it was a condominium, it needed to convey style, comfort and most importantly – liveability. When it came to the final decision, AGWAY Metal's Flat Lock profile was the panel of choice.

With the selection of the Flat Lock panel as the exterior cladding, it now came down to colour selection. For the project to deliver a more unique appeal the colour choice become crucial. The decision to use Graphite Grey was not only predicated on its aesthetics, but it's ability to work in tandem with the overall projects design. This was particularly apparent how the Flat Lock Graphite Grey blended with the condominium balconies within the overall structure. As evident by the completed project all building components worked incredibly well together.

Because AGWAY's Flat Lock Wall panels are based on a modular panel system this results in delivering a traditional rectangular design. Which adds to the overall appeal. The Flat Lock panel is available in various sizes, making it very versatile allowing the option to mix and match to create a more unique appearance. And with no visible fasteners the panels deliver a more appealing and attractive exposure.
